Then ask participants a question such as: What opportunities do you see for progress on this issue? How would you handle this situation? What ideas or actions would you recommend? Start the sequence and ask them to take 2 minutes to answer this question on their own in their personal note. Divide them up into pairs and tell them to go to different sub-tables to debrief their answers orally with their partner. Give them 3 minutes. Send out an announcement asking pairs to gather with another pair around a sub-tables containing blank collaborative notes. There must be 4 of them around the same table. Broadcast mode <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Give the following instruction: Now that you've shared your thoughts with your pair, you're going to share the exchange you had with another pair. During the discussion in your group of 4, you'll be able to detect similarities and differences in your reflections. Take notes on the collaborative note to keep track of your exchanges. Subgroups mode <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Give the groups 5 minutes to exchange ideas and record them on their collaborative note. Send out an announcement asking them to pick out one key idea from their conversation. Broadcast mode <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Hold a large-group presentation of the discussions that took place in groups of 4. Ask one person from each group to act as spokesperson. Present the note corresponding to the group's work when a spokesperson presents his or her group's reflections. Note the key ideas emerging from each group on the "Synthesis" collaborative note. Proposer aux participants d'exporter leur note personnelle ainsi que les différentes notes collaboratives pour garder la trace de leur travail.
